Strategy Guide & Tier Rankings

Overview

Before we get started, let me tell you a story about my 2018 draft. A running back who was selected in the second round of our draft tore his ACL less than an hour after that (during our draft!). The rest of the teams scrambled and picked up the backup running backs in San Francisco. The moral here is that you should always confirm a player is healthy before you draft them. Don't take this for granted. Once preseason starts, a player can be injured at any time ... including the day of your draft!

Now... the mistake most people make in Fantasy Drafts is a reliance on a position or hoping to get a specific player or a certain amount of a specific position. In reality, it makes more sense to arrange your draft board like NFL teams arrange their college prospect draft boards.

I've analyzed every player's schedule as well as their strength of competition. As part of this analysis, I've produced projected points and competitive advantage in relation to other players. I then ranked players into tier levels based on the competitive advantage they will offer throughout the season. This is important as your fantasy draft moves on and you're choosing between a starting quarterback or a flex running back. The correct thing to do when faced with this situation is take the player who will provide the most point advantage over your competition. This is where our Points Above Replacement, Play Calling analysis and scouting reports come into play.

2022 is an interesting year for TEs. Unlike recent seasons, I see a lot of depth. There is a recent push in fantasy football to draft tight ends very early and I understand the logic, but there are 4 or 5 high quality players at the position now and several others with upward potential. I think you can wait longer to make a splash at TE this season.

Step 1: Draft as Many Tier 1 and Tier 2 Players As Possible

Simply put, no matter who is on the board or how many players at these positions you have, do not draft a lower-tier player until all of these players are off the board.

Tier 1:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
	Jonathan Taylor	Cooper Kupp
	Austin Ekeler	Justin Jefferson
	Dalvin Cook	Deebo Samuel
	Derrick Henry	Stefon Diggs
	Christian McCaffrey	Ja'Marr Chase
	Najee Harris
	Alvin Kamara
	Joe Mixon

Tier 2:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Josh Allen	Aaron Jones	Tyreek Hill	Mark Andrews	NA	NA
	Nick Chubb	Chris Godwin	Travis Kelce
	Leonard Fournette	Davante Adams	Kyle Pitts
	D'Andre Swift	CeeDee Lamb	George Kittle
	James Conner	Mike Evans
	Javonte Williams	Keenan Allen
	J.K. Dobbins	Diontae Johnson
	Cam Akers
	Ezekiel Elliott

Step 2: Start Considering Other Positions

The first two tiers will likely be exhausted by the end of the 2nd round or 3rd rounds. There are many famous names in lower tiers, so do not be surprised if this list will take you into rounds 5 or 6.

I suggest starting the 6th round with solid RB/WR options and at least 1 TE OR QB. You should have at least three starting caliber RBs and two starting caliber WRs. Based on the value I'm seeing at QB and TE in the later rounds this season, if you want to draft the best of both at this point in the draft, that's ok because I'm also liking the value of a couple RBs and WRs late.

Tier 3:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Justin Herbert	Saquon Barkley	Amari Cooper	Darren Waller	NA	NA
Patrick Mahomes	Antonio Gibson	Terry McLaurin
	Elijah Mitchell	Tee Higgins
	David Montgomery	A.J. Brown
	Clyde Edwards-Helaire	DJ Moore
		DK Metcalf
		Jaylen Waddle
		Allen Robinson
		Marquise Brown
		Michael Thomas
		Adam Thielen
		DeAndre Hopkins

Step 3: Pick Viable Starters Where You're Weak

By now, you should be well into the middle rounds of the draft. Depending on how your league has drafted, you might have a very strong bench of RB/WR options, or you might have starters at all positions, but lack depth. RBs are so important in standard leagues that I recommend continuing to build depth at that position.

Tier 4:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Kyler Murray	AJ Dillon	JuJu Smith-Schuster	T.J. Hockenson	NA	NA
Lamar Jackson	Breece Hall	Michael Pittman Jr.
	Rashaad Penny	Courtland Sutton
	Josh Jacobs	Michael Gallup
	Travis Etienne Jr.	Darnell Mooney
	Chase Edmonds	Amon-Ra St. Brown
	Miles Sanders	Jerry Jeudy
		Mike Williams
		Hunter Renfrow
		Rashod Bateman
		Treyton Burks

Tier 5:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Dak Prescott	Kareem Hunt	Brandin Cooks	Zach Ertz	NA	NA
Jalen Hurts	Cordarrelle Patterson	Elijah Moore	Dalton Schultz
Tom Brady	Tony Pollard	Allen Lazard	Dallas Goedert
Matthew Stafford	James Robinson	Gabriel Davis
Joe Burrow	Damien Harris	Chase Claypool
Aaron Rodgers	James Cook	Christian Kirk
Russell Wilson	Michael Carter	Russell Gage
		Robert Woods

Tier 6:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Deshaun Watson	Darrell Henderson Jr.	Brandon Aiyuk	Mike Gesicki	NA	NA
	Ken Walker III	DeVonta Smith	Dawson Knox
	Ronald Jones Jr.	Tyler Lockett	Hunter Henry
	Khalil Herbert	Drake London	Cameron Brate
	Rhamondre Stevenson	Rondale Moore	Pat Freiermuth
	Jamaal Williams	Christian Watson
	Melvin Gordon III
	Raheem Mostert

Step 4: Find Potential

At this point, you'll probably have great depth at RB and very strong WRs. You probably also have a starter at either TE or QB (or both). Based on the value I'm seeing late in the draft; I think now is the time that you should make sure you do have a starter at each position. If you neglected QB or TE early, grab one at this point.

Tier 7:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
NA	Chris Carson	Jamison Crowder	Evan Engram	Buffalo Bills	NA
	Kenneth Gainwell	Jakobi Meyers	David Njoku	Tampa Bay Buccaneers
	Devin Singletary	Garrett Wilson	Robert Tonyan	San Francisco 49ers
	James White	Kadarius Toney	Logan Thomas
	J.D. McKissic	Kenny Golladay	Hayden Hurst
	Marlon Mack	Jarvis Landry
	Tyrion Davis-Price	Marvin Jones Jr.
	Sony Michel	D.J. Chark Jr.

Step 5: Complete Your Draft, Trade and Play the Waiver Wire

You'll notice that I've started to include my top-rated kickers and defense / special teams groups. Draft guides will typically recommend that you wait until the last round for a kicker and as late as the second-to-last round to draft your defense. For the most part I agree, however, remember what we talked about with competitive advantage.

Because most players will draft their K and DST positions last, I suggest you start earlier. For example, let's say your draft lasts 16 rounds (a typical format). Rather than waiting until rounds 15 and 16, draft your defense in round 12 or 13 and your kicker in round 13 or 14. Some will laugh at you, but you'll be fortifying the last two spots on your roster. Then in rounds 15 and 16 when everyone is picking their kickers, you'll be able to find compelling players in (likely in the tiers above) that could develop into starters by the end of the season.

Tier 8:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Kirk Cousins	Boston Scott	Sterling Shepard	Cole Kmet	New Orleans Saints	NA
Derek Carr	Mark Ingram II	Sky Moore
Jameis Winston	Damien Williams	DeVante Parker
Tua Tagovailoa	Alexander Mattison	M. Valdes-Scantling
Justin Fields	Nyheim Hines	Mecole Hardman
Trey Lance	Kenyan Drake	Jameson Williams
		Tim Patrick
		Chris Olave

Tier 9:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Daniel Jones	Isaiah Spiller	Tyler Boyd	Noah Fant	Indianapolis Colts	Matt Gay
Ryan Tannehill	Jerick McKinnon	Byron Pringle	Irv Smith Jr.	New England Patriots	Justin Tucker
Marcus Mariota	Chuba Hubbard	Corey Davis	Albert Okwuegbunam	Pittsburgh Steelers	Ryan Succop
Carson Wentz	Gus Edwards	Van Jefferson	Tommy Tremble	Kansas City Chiefs	Tyler Bass
Matt Ryan	Zamir White	Laviska Shenault Jr.	Kyle Rudolph	Los Angeles Rams	Daniel Carlson
Trevor Lawrence	Rachaad White	A.J. Green	Ricky Seals-Jones	Arizona Cardinals	Matt Prater
Mac Jones	Keaontay Ingram	D. Peoples-Jones	Tyler Higbee	Green Bay Packers	Evan McPherson
Mitchell Trubisky	Brandon Bolden	James Washington	Gerald Everett	Miami Dolphins	Rodrigo Blankenship
Kenny Pickett	Darrel Williams	Odell Beckham Jr.	Austin Hooper	Dallas Cowboys	Robbie Gould
	Hassan Haskins	Robby Anderson	Jonnu Smith	Baltimore Ravens	Harrison Butker
	Dameon Pierce	Kendrick Bourne			Nick Folk
	Trey Sermon	William Fuller V			Mason Crosby
	Tyler Allgeier	Randall Cobb			Greg Joseph
	Brian Robinson Jr.	Marquez Callaway			Younghoe Koo
	Jeff Wilson Jr.	Alec Pierce			Jason Sanders
	Rex Burkhead	Julio Jones			Jake Elliott
	Myles Gaskin	Cole Beasley			Greg Zuerlein
	Eno Benjamin	Wan'Dale Robinson			Chris Boswell

Half Point Per Reception

Strategy Guide & Tier Rankings

Overview

Before we get started, let me tell you a story about my 2018 draft. A running back who was selected in the second round of our draft tore his ACL less than an hour after that (during our draft!). The rest of the teams scrambled and picked up the backup running backs in San Francisco. The moral here is that you should always confirm a player is healthy before you draft them. Don't take this for granted. Once preseason starts, a player can be injured at any time ... including the day of your draft!

Now... the mistake most people make in Fantasy Drafts is a reliance on a position or hoping to get a specific player or a certain amount of a specific position. In reality, it makes more sense to arrange your draft board like NFL teams arrange their college prospect draft boards.

I've analyzed every player's schedule as well as their strength of competition. As part of this analysis, I've produced projected points and competitive advantage in relation to other players. I then ranked players into tier levels based on the competitive advantage they will offer throughout the season. This is important as your fantasy draft moves on and you're choosing between a starting quarterback or a flex running back. The correct thing to do when faced with this situation is take the player who will provide the most point advantage over your competition. This is where our Points Above Replacement, Play Calling analysis and scouting reports come into play.

2022 is an interesting year for TEs. Unlike recent seasons, I see a lot of depth. There is a recent push in fantasy football to draft tight ends very early and I understand the logic, but there are 4 or 5 high quality players at the position now and several others with upward potential. I think you can wait longer to make a splash at TE this season.

Step 1: Draft as Many Tier 1 and Tier 2 Players As Possible

Simply put, no matter who is on the board or how many players at these positions you have, do not draft a lower-tier player until all of these players are off the board.

Tier 1:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
NA	Jonathan Taylor	Cooper Kupp	NA	NA	NA
	Austin Ekeler	Justin Jefferson
	Derrick Henry	Deebo Samuel
	Dalvin Cook	Stefon Diggs
	Christian McCaffrey	Ja'Marr Chase
	Najee Harris
	Alvin Kamara
	Joe Mixon
	Nick Chubb

Tier 2:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Josh Allen	Aaron Jones	Chris Godwin	Mark Andrews	NA	NA
Justin Herbert	James Conner	Davante Adams	Travis Kelce
	Leonard Fournette	Tyreek Hill	George Kittle
	Javonte Williams	CeeDee Lamb	Kyle Pitts
	J.K. Dobbins	Mike Evans
	D'Andre Swift	Keenan Allen
	Ezekiel Elliott	Diontae Johnson
	Cam Akers
	Elijah Mitchell

Step 2: Start Considering Other Positions

The first two tiers will likely be exhausted by the end of the 2nd round or 3rd rounds. There are many famous names in lower tiers, so do not be surprised if this list will take you into rounds 5 or 6.

I suggest starting the 6th round with solid RB/WR options and at least 1 TE OR QB. You should have at least three starting caliber RBs and two starting caliber WRs. Based on the value I'm seeing at QB and TE in the later rounds this season, but if you want to draft the best of both at this point in the draft, that's ok because I'm also liking the value of a couple RBs and WRs late.

Tier 3:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Patrick Mahomes	Saquon Barkley	Amari Cooper	Darren Waller	NA	NA
	Antonio Gibson	Terry McLaurin
	David Montgomery	Tee Higgins
	AJ Dillon	A.J. Brown
	Breece Hall	DJ Moore
	Clyde Edwards-Helaire	DK Metcalf
		Allen Robinson
		Jaylen Waddle
		Michael Thomas
		Marquise Brown
		Adam Thielen
		DeAndre Hopkins
		JuJu Smith-Schuster

Step 3: Pick Viable Starters Where You're Weak

By now, you should be well into the middle rounds of the draft. Depending on how your league has drafted, you might have a very strong bench of RB/WR options, or you might have starters at all positions, but lack depth. RBs are so important in standard leagues that I recommend continuing to build depth at that position.

Tier 4:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Kyler Murray	Rashaad Penny	Michael Pittman Jr.	T.J. Hockenson	NA	NA
Lamar Jackson	Josh Jacobs	Courtland Sutton
Dak Prescott	Chase Edmonds	Michael Gallup
Jalen Hurts	Travis Etienne Jr.	Darnell Mooney
Tom Brady	Damien Harris	Amon-Ra St. Brown

Miles Sanders	Jerry Jeudy
Kareem Hunt	Mike Williams
	Rashod Bateman
	Treyton Burks
	Brandin Cooks
	Hunter Renfrow

Tier 5:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Matthew Stafford	Tony Pollard	Elijah Moore	Zach Ertz	NA	NA
Joe Burrow	Cordarrelle Patterson	Allen Lazard	Dallas Goedert
Aaron Rodgers	James Robinson	Gabriel Davis	Dalton Schultz
Russell Wilson	Ken Walker III	Chase Claypool	Mike Gesicki
	James Cook	Christian Kirk
	Darrell Henderson Jr.	Robert Woods
	Michael Carter	Russell Gage

Tier 6:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Deshaun Watson	Khalil Herbert	Brandon Aiyuk	Dawson Knox	NA	NA
	Jamaal Williams	DeVonta Smith	Hunter Henry
	Rhamondre Stevenson	Tyler Lockett	Cameron Brate
	Melvin Gordon III	Drake London	Pat Freiermuth
	Ronald Jones Jr.	Jakobi Meyers	Evan Engram
	Raheem Mostert	Garrett Wilson	David Njoku
	Chris Carson
	Kenneth Gainwell
	Marlon Mack

Step 4: Find Potential

At this point, you'll probably have great depth at RB and very strong WRs. You probably also have a starter at either TE or QB (or both). Based on the value I'm seeing late in the draft; I think now is the time that you should make sure you do have a starter at each position. If you neglected QB or TE early, grab one at this point.

Tier 7:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Kirk Cousins	Devin Singletary	Rondale Moore	Robert Tonyan	Buffalo Bills	NA
	Sony Michel	Kadarius Toney	Logan Thomas	Tampa Bay Buccaneers
	James White	Christian Watson	Hayden Hurst	San Francisco 49ers
	J.D. McKissic	Jamison Crowder
	Tyrion Davis-Price	Kenny Golladay
	Damien Williams	Jarvis Landry
		D.J. Chark Jr.
		Marvin Jones Jr.

Step 5: Complete Your Draft, Trade and Play the Waiver Wire

You'll notice that I've started to include my top-rated kickers and defense / special teams groups. Draft guides will typically recommend that you wait until the last round for a kicker and as late as the second-to-last round to draft your defense. For the most part I agree, however, remember what we talked about with competitive advantage.

Because most players will draft their K and DST positions last, I suggest you start earlier. For example, let's say your draft lasts 16 rounds (a typical format). Rather than waiting until rounds 15 and 16, draft your defense in round 12 or 13 and your kicker in round 13 or 14. Some will laugh at you, but you'll be fortifying the last two spots on your roster. Then in rounds 15 and 16 when everyone is picking their kickers, you'll be able to find compelling players in (likely in the tiers above) that could develop into starters by the end of the season.

Tier 8:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Derek Carr	Boston Scott	Sterling Shepard	Cole Kmet	New Orleans Saints	NA
Jameis Winston	Mark Ingram II	DeVante Parker	Noah Fant
Tua Tagovailoa	Alexander Mattison	Skye Moore	Irv Smith Jr.

Trey Lance	Kenyan Drake	Marquez Valdes-Scantling
	Gus Edwards	Mecole Hardman
		Jameson Williams
		Chris Olave
		Chris Olave
		Tyler Boyd

Tier 9:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Daniel Jones	Isaiah Spiller	Braxton Berrios	Albert Okwuegbunam	Indianapolis Colts	Matt Gay
Ryan Tannehill	Keaontay Ingram	Byron Pringle	Tommy Tremble	New England Patriots	Justin Tucker

Standard (Non-Points Per Reception) Rankings

Strategy Guide & Tier Rankings

Overview

Before we get started, let me tell you a story about my 2018 draft. A running back who was selected in the second round of our draft tore his ACL less than an hour after that (during our draft!). The rest of the teams scrambled and picked up the backup running backs in San Francisco. The moral here is that you should always confirm a player is healthy before you draft them. Don't take this for granted. Once preseason starts, a player can be injured at any time ... including the day of your draft!

Now... the mistake most people make in Fantasy Drafts is a reliance on a position or hoping to get a specific player or a certain amount of a specific position. In reality, it makes more sense to arrange your draft board like NFL teams arrange their college prospect draft boards.

I've analyzed every player's schedule as well as their strength of competition. As part of this analysis, I've produced projected points and competitive advantage in relation to other players. I then ranked players into tier levels based on the competitive advantage they will offer throughout the season. This is important as your fantasy draft moves on and you're choosing between a starting quarterback or a flex running back. The correct thing to do when faced with this situation is take the player who will provide the most point advantage over your competition. This is where our Points Above Replacement, Play Calling analysis and scouting reports come into play.

2022 is an interesting year for TEs. Unlike recent seasons, I see a lot of depth. There is a recent push in fantasy football to draft tight ends very early and I understand the logic, but there are 4 or 5 high quality players at the position now and several others with upward potential. I think you can wait longer to make a splash at TE this season.

Step 1: Draft as Many Tier 1 and Tier 2 Players As Possible

Simply put, no matter who is on the board or how many players at these positions you have, do not draft a lower-tier player until all of these players are off the board.

Tier 1:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
NA	Jonathan Taylor Derrick Henry Austin Ekeler Dalvin Cook Christian McCaffrey Najee Harris Joe Mixon Alvin Kamara Nick Chubb	Cooper Kupp Justin Jefferson Deebo Samuel Stefon Diggs Ja'Marr Chase	NA	NA	NA

Tier 2:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Josh Allen Justin Herbert	James Conner Aaron Jones Leonard Fournette	Davante Adams Chris Godwin CeeDee Lamb	Mark Andrews Travis Kelce George Kittle	NA	NA

Javonte Williams	Mike Evans	Kyle Pitts
J.K. Dobbins	Keenan Allen
Ezekiel Elliott	Tyreek Hill
Cam Akers	Amari Cooper
Elijah Mitchell
D'Andre Swift

Step 2: Start Considering Other Positions

The first two tiers will likely be exhausted by the end of the 2nd round or 3rd rounds. There are many famous names in lower tiers, so do not be surprised if this list will take you into rounds 5 or 6.

I suggest starting the 6th round with solid RB/WR options and at least 1 TE OR QB. You should have at least three starting caliber RBs and two starting caliber WRs. Based on the value I'm seeing at QB and TE in the later rounds this season, but if you want to draft the best of both at this point in the draft, that's ok because I'm also liking the value of a couple RBs and WRs late.

Tier 3:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Patrick Mahomes	Saquon Barkley	Terry McLaurin	Darren Waller	NA	NA
	AJ Dillon	Diontae Johnson
	Antonio Gibson	Tee Higgins
	Breece Hall	A.J. Brown
	David Montgomery	DJ Moore
	Clyde Edwards-Helaire	Allen Robinson
		DK Metcalf
		Michael Thomas
		Jaylen Waddle
		Marquise Brown
		Adam Thielen
		DeAndre Hopkins

Step 3: Pick Viable Starters Where You're Weak

By now, you should be well into the middle rounds of the draft. Depending on how your league has drafted, you might have a very strong bench of RB/WR options, or you might have starters at all positions, but lack depth. RBs are so important in standard leagues that I recommend continuing to build depth at that position.

Tier 4:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Kyler Murray	Damien Harris	JuJu Smith-Schuster	T.J. Hockenson	NA	NA
Lamar Jackson	Rashaad Penny	Michael Pittman Jr.
	Josh Jacobs	Courtland Sutton
	Chase Edmonds	Michael Gallup
	Travis Etienne Jr.	Darnell Mooney
	Ken Walker III	Amon-Ra St. Brown
	Miles Sanders	Jerry Jeudy
	Tony Pollard	Mike Williams
		Rashod Bateman
		Treyton Burks
		Brandin Cooks

Tier 5:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Dak Prescott	James Robinson	Elijah Moore	Zach Ertz	NA	NA
Jalen Hurts	Kareem Hunt	Allen Lazard	Dallas Goedert
Tom Brady	Cordarrelle Patterson	Hunter Renfrow	Dalton Schultz
Matthew Stafford	Jamaal Williams	Gabriel Davis
Joe Burrow	Khalil Herbert	Chase Claypool
Aaron Rodgers	Rhamondre Stevenson	Christian Kirk
Russell Wilson	James Cook	Robert Woods

Tier 6:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Deshaun Watson	Darrell Henderson Jr.	Brandon Aiyuk	Mike Gesicki	NA	NA
	Melvin Gordon III	Russell Gage	Dawson Knox
	Michael Carter	DeVonta Smith	Hunter Henry

	Kenneth Gainwell
	Raheem Mostert
	Chris Carson

Step 4: Find Potential

At this point, you'll probably have great depth at RB and very strong WRs. You probably also have a starter at either TE or QB (or both). Based on the value I'm seeing late in the draft; I think now is the time that you should make sure you do have a starter at each position. If you neglected QB or TE early, grab one at this point.

Tier 7:

QB	RB	WR	TE	DST	K
Kirk Cousins	Sony Michel	Garrett Wilson	Evan Engram	Buffalo Bills	NA
	Devin Singletary	Jakobi Meyers	David Njoku	Tampa Bay Buccaneers
	James White	Kadarius Toney	Robert Tonyan	San Francisco 49ers
	Damien Williams	D.J. Chark Jr.	Logan Thomas
	J.D. McKissic	Marquez Valdes-Scantling	Hayden Hurst
	Tyrion Davis-Price	Kenny Golladay
		Jarvis Landry
		Marvin Jones Jr.

Step 5: Complete Your Draft, Trade and Play the Waiver Wire

You'll notice that I've started to include my top-rated kickers and defense / special teams groups. Draft guides will typically recommend that you wait until the last round for a kicker and as late as the second-to-last round to draft your defense. For the most part I agree, however, remember what we talked about with competitive advantage.

Because most players will draft their K and DST positions last, I suggest you start earlier. For example, let's say your draft lasts 16 rounds (a typical format). Rather than waiting until rounds 15 and 16, draft your defense in round 12 or 13 and your kicker in round 13 or 14. Some will laugh at you, but you'll be fortifying the last two spots on your roster. Then in rounds 15 and 16 when everyone is picking their kickers, you'll be able to find compelling players in (likely in the tiers above) that could develop into starters by the end of the season.

Tier 8:

Fantasy Points Above Replacement (PAR)[™]

Fantasy PAR (PAR)

For my return readers, you might recognize the term “Opportunity Ranking”, which I used to explain the core differentiator of my methodology in relation to the rest of the fantasy football community. Points Above Replacement (PAR) is the next generation of that philosophy. PAR is a measurement of how many points your player is worth in a lineup with respect to the average competitor at his position.

How It Works – In Layman’s Terms

As you know by now, the Fantasy Football Almanac places an emphasis on future outcomes. I project each player’s season totals using an algorithm that considers: 1) Coaching Philosophy and Scheme, 2) Historical Performance 3) New Competition (via free agency or draft) and most importantly, 4) their individual matchups over the course of the season.

Once I complete player projections, I feed them into a second algorithm that computes a per-game average point advantage relative to your competition.

In other words, PAR helps you compare the strength of the top Tight End vs the top Running Back on your board.

How I Apply PAR

You'll notice that my PAR computations below DO NOT MATCH the rankings provided above. This is very important. While I believe that using PAR as your sole rankings will work (and I've had several players win their league championship using this approach), I don't think this is the best way to apply it.

Also, it's important to note that even I don't always agree with the computer simulations. I'm a fan of analytics, but that's why we always combine the eye test. A great example this year is that my computers like Joe Mixon more than Cam Akers. I do not share that opinion and my rankings reflect that.

Example Of Incorrect PAR Use:

Let's say you're in a 10-team snake draft format and your first four picks are 5th, 16th and 25th and 36th. If you were to follow PAR exclusively, you could wind up with the following:

- 5: Deebo Samuel 7.99 PAR (drafted WAYYY too early compared to his ADP)
- 16: Chris Godwin 4.60 PAR (you would be insane to draft him here! More on this below)
- 25: Leonard Fournette 3.68 PAR (reasonable value)
- 36: Tom Brady 3.55 PAR (reasonable value)
- Total PAR: 19.82 PAR

Would those be awful picks? Yes, actually. Following strong computer projections for two rookies and staking your entire season on that is questionable at best. Considering you'd be able to get both of those players MUCH later in the draft, it's really inexcusable. If you used PAR exclusively, you won't have executed your draft well!

This is why it's important to take the current ADP into account. The goal, after all, is to maximize your PAR. The way to maximize PAR isn't to take the highest PAR score as soon as you can. It's to take the highest value as late as you can. Rather than draft one of these guys with high PAR projections early, wait for the appropriate draft position. As of the time of this writing, you can get Deebo Samuel in the 2nd round. You can get Chris Godwin in the 4th round and Tom Brady is going in the 9th round. Specifically, use these PAR rankings to find undervalued/under drafted talent and to identify sleepers and to break a tie between two or more players you like in your draft slot.

Example of Practical PAR Use:

Let's take the same scenario. This time, I will use my rankings and use PAR as a means to maximize my draft value instead. Notice how I can still get my undervalued talent in the later rounds.

- 5: Dalvin Cook 6.29 PAR
- 16: Deebo Samuel 7.99 PAR
- 25: Josh Allen 6.18 PAR
- 36: Aaron Jones 5.33 PAR
- 45: Chris Godwin 4.60 PAR

- 56: Clyde Edwards-Helaire 1.76 PAR
- 65: Adam Thielen 5.05 PAR
- 76: Hunter Renfrow 3.87 PAR
- 85: JuJu Smith-Schuster 1.11 PAR
- 96: Mike Gesicki -0.58 PAR
- 105: James Cook -4.23 PAR
- 116: Michael Gallup 2.65 PAR
- Total PAR: 40.02 PAR

You'll notice that I picked a couple of players with a negative PAR score. The reason is because I needed a tight end with upside with the 96th pick and the running backs were thin at pick 105 and I wanted depth. I felt comfortable knowing Michael Gallup's ADP was lower. The moral of the story is this: use the rankings first and foremost and PAR as a strategic boost as you're working the middle and late rounds.

Summary

PAR is a tool available only to Almanac readers. I don't publish these anywhere else. But remember that it is only a tool. This is incredibly effective predicting sleepers and identifying risk players (notice how Christian McCaffrey is rated only 5th?). This is how I've urged readers to steer clear of Le'Veon Bell and to draft Darren Waller and Lamar Jackson in 2019.

PAR helps you grab the most consistent star performers at the top of the draft, draft the best upside in the middle and grab the strongest sleepers yet.

REMINDER: I know a few readers skip right to the rankings. If you didn't read the notes above, remember to use the rankings first and use PAR as a means to break a tie or help find value in the middle or later rounds.

Auction Draft Strategy

I appreciate the feedback of the Almanac Readers and when possible. Readers who participate in auction drafts ask me how my rankings translate to auction strategy. My very short answer is that my rankings are built to maximize competitive advantage in each draft and to offer my readers the best strategy to 1) create a plan and 2) adapt. No matter your scoring system, having the tiered approach will allow you to build the best team possible. Auctions are fun. Not only are we looking at per-player competitive advantage and their season-long point value, but we are also looking at the per-player budget with respect to your league. Having a budgeted plan going into the draft will help gain even more value from this text.

Understanding Your Rules

I always mention the importance of understanding your scoring rules (including explosive play bonuses and negative points (if any) for turnovers). Of course, this is crucial. Knowing your auction rules is just as important. Leagues are going to differ in roster size, starting/flex player amounts, etc. For this guide, I'm going to adhere to what I consider to be the standard league approach which is comprised of the following:

- Roster Size: 16 Players
- Starting QB: 1
- Starting RB: 1
- Starting WR: 1
- Starting TE: 1
- Starting Flex (RB/WR/TE): 3
- Starting Kicker: 1
- Starting DST: 1

In this scenario, you will have 9 starting players and 7 bench slots.

Breaking Down Your Budget

The most frequently asked question is “how much money should I spend on player x?” and I'm sorry if I've done this to you, but my reply is always that it depends. It depends on how many bench players you have; it depends on how many starters you have. It depends on your waiver rules. But ultimately, there is no particular dollar amount to spend on a player. Instead, it helps to look at each player as a percentage of your budget (who knew those fraction lessons you blew off in grade school had real-world fantasy football implications in adulthood?). I've looked over a ton of resources – many publications I very much respect – but they are doing a poor job of setting auction strategy in two key areas: 1. There is little room to help their readers adapt and 2. There is little in-draft strategy involved.

For the sake of my entire audience, I'm not going to talk specific dollars, but use percentages (with dollar examples to follow up). If your roster is comprised of 16 players, then each player is worth 6.25% of your total budget. When you think of your budget in terms of percentages instead of dollars, it makes things easier to translate across the board.

I'll base my example on a typical $200 budget. In this scenario, each player is worth 6.25% of that budget, or $12.50. If your budget is $500, then your per-player cost is $25.00 ($$500 * 6.25\%$). If it's $100, then your per-player cost is $6.25. If math and fractions aren't your thing, no worries. Your cell phone has a calculator. And if cell phone calculators aren't your thing, you can sign up for my mailing list and I'll send you a spreadsheet that you can customize with your league rules and budgets.

Important Note:

I'm going to assume that you are allowed to exhaust your entire draft day budget on the draft and waivers are handled separately. If your league requires you to keep some of your budget, make sure you keep enough in the bank to claim players on waivers.

Per-Player Budget

I'm contrarian to most players, but I don't care about per-player value. I suppose I look at auction drafts much like Bill Belichick looks at his Patriots roster. I don't care about one particular person. My goal in an auction draft is to spend money on consistently productive players and find diamonds in the rough. The NFL will vary year to year, but you can always count on high tier RBs to pull you through. You just need to keep your spending in check.

While trying to grab your running backs, keep in mind that a team with more tier-2 RBs will likely have more flexibility and upside in-season. For example, if your strategy is based round buying the best player at each position, what happens if they get injured?

I urge you to keep a fluid approach on per-player or per-position budgeting. That said, I do want to provide some framework. Let's assume your 16-player roster will be broken down as follows (but do feel free to deviate here):

- 2 Quarterbacks: $20 (or 10%)
- 5 Running Backs: $100 (or 50%)
- 5 Wide Receivers: $60 (or 30%)
- 2 Tight Ends: $10 (or 5%)
- 1 Kicker: $2* (or 1%)
- 1 DST: $2* (or 1%)
- Totals: 16 Players: $200

Note: The dollar amounts at each position are a total amount. Not a per-player amount

*You'll see that I suggest $2 for a kicker and $2 for a defense. This will make most of you scratch your heads because conventional wisdom states that you should never spend more than $1 on them. I'll explain why that shouldn't be the case below. There's a method to the madness, folks. Read on!

By now, you've probably read through my guide ... or perhaps just scrolled through the rankings. With respect to auction drafts, I suggest you scrutinize the players in the top tier – specifically the running backs. In recent years, Christian McCaffrey specifically has risen above the rest, but for reasons described earlier, I think he's going to come back down to the pack. While he's still likely the consensus number 1 pick, I'm not going to be the person to win the spirited auction.

With every player, whether it's McCaffrey at RB or position-standouts like Mahomes or Lamar Jackson at QB, you need to be disciplined.

Auction Strategy

It's simple, right? The object of the auction draft, like any draft, is to get as many of the best players on your team. To do this, you need to drive the cost of star players down.

I'm going to state this again, but differently because it's important. Everyone wants to have the best players on their team and in the race to acquire them, the vast majority of auction fantasy football players forget one simple rule: The competition isn't so much about the players as it is their wallets.

How do you make players less expensive? Get your competition to spend their money too early.

How To ~~Sabotage Your Competition~~ ... Nominate Players Strategically

Many of you participate in leagues where the commissioner will dictate the players nominated for auction. Perhaps there will be a silent auction, or multiple players listed at once over email while a group haggles over the price. In these situations, I understand you won't have much control over the situation. But for those of you who do, here's how to completely throw your league off.

1. In the early rounds, don't nominate a star player you want. Let someone else do that. Use your early nominations to drain the bank accounts of your players. Examples:
 - a. If you know someone in your league is a huge Eagles fan, nominate Zach Ertz at a respectable amount in the hopes that it sparks a bidding war. Though never nominate this player for more than you're willing to pay for him in the case nobody else bids.
 - b. Nominate your favorite defense for $1-2. Do you think Pittsburgh is a safe bet to accumulate sacks and turnovers again, and do you think they will be a season-long starter on your team? Will anyone in your league out-bid you for a team defense this yearly in the draft? People may throw popcorn at you or dump their beer on your head, but it'll be fun to get under their skin this early. You can have friends before and after the draft – but when the bidding starts, take no prisoners.
 - c. Ditto Kicker. It's unlikely anyone is going to try to outbid you for Harrison Butker in round 1.
 - d. If you really want to be dirty, start throwing mid-tier running backs out there that you can't stand. Take a guy like Kareem Hunt. He should have value, but the amount is being debated. Imagine the fun you'll have when you nominate him (or someone else you don't care for) for $1 and watch a few players with pained expressions battling it out for a running back they don't even know if they'll want on their roster. If nobody bites? You'll have a high ceiling player for $1 at a key position.

Again, think of the auction draft as a means to make your competition spend more money on players you don't want early in the draft. Once players break the bank early, you can outbid them later and build a deep, strong team with upside.

It's OK to Be Aggressive

Yes, I love driving my competitors crazy. If you, do it well enough, they won't even realize what you're doing or why you're laughing at them ... until they're 8 beers in, comparing the $7 they have left in their pocket to the $195 stack of cash you have in front of you. But don't let this take you away from being aggressive with the players you want.

When it comes to the tier 1 players on your draft sheet, you can feel confident in fighting for them, but it's not going to be in your best interests to fight hard for more than 2 (probably not more than 1). You should have a budget cap in mind for each player. If you think you're lean at a position and you go over your budget a bit, then be disciplined enough to dial it back on your bench guys.

If you follow the general principle of making your competitors spend their money while having laser-like precision in the early rounds, you'll be in a position to absolutely dominate tier-2 and tier-3 players and should have the deepest, most flexible roster in your league ... and likely the best DST and Kicker to boot.

Rough Budget Per Player:

Starters:

- QB: $7 (or 5%)
- RB1: $35 (or 17.5%)
- RB2: $30 (or 15%)
- WR1: $33 (or 15%)
- WR2: $20 (or 15%)
- TE: $4 (or 2%)
- Flex: $28 (or 14%)
- K: $2 (or 1%)
- DST: $2 (or 1%)
- Backup QB: $2 (or 1%)
- Backup RB1: $10 (or 5%)
- Backup RB2: $9 (or 4.5%)
- Backup WR1: $8 (or 4%)
- Backup WR2: $7 (or 3.5%)
- Backup TE: $1 (or 0.5%)
- Backup Flex: $2 (or 1%)

Based on 16 Players and $200 Budget

In the above scenario, I'm assuming you will compete heavily for Davante Adams or Tyreek Hill at WR and a strong RB who is not Christian McCaffrey or Dalvin Cook. Remember, while you're securing backup and bench players with your auction nominations, others will be bringing up the studs.

If you want to spend more money on a Tight End or QB, this is ok. You will just have to adjust the amounts of the rest of your team accordingly.

Auction Tier Guidelines:

As I said, it's fine to be aggressive with one or two guys at the beginning of the draft, but you're going to end up winning your auction league by having enough cash on hand to dominate other tiers. As you know, I arrange my tiers to provide competitive advantage per position. This is why I prefer to start the run on kickers and DST units (still late in the draft, but early enough to be proactive).

I lean heavy on running backs, but if you want to take a crack at a strong QB, I'm good with that. He might be more expensive than the "prescribed" quarterback amount, but the competitive advantage he'll give you week to week could be worth that spend. If you want to spend a lot of dough to grab both Patrick Mahomes and Travis Kelce for that strategic value, that's fine too. Just know that you will have less to spend on your bench later. Lucky for you, our PAR section has isolated a few guys who will be low-cost, high value this year.

Dynasty League Rankings

My philosophy on dynasty and deep keeper formats (those that keep five players or more) is simple. Sacrifice season 1, dominate the rest of your career. The philosophy behind this almanac was built for dynasty leagues because as many of you know, the annual draft turns into an exercise in projecting which sleepers will break through (so you can trade for them) and which rookies have a clear path to starting and more importantly, starring.

Now, as with my rankings across the board, you'll notice I'm contrarian in a few areas. I mentioned my rule of thumb is to sacrifice year one in exchange for dominance in years two through eternity. For that reason, you're going to see me favor youth over production. This is because I project these younger players to either keep improving or break onto the scene in the coming years.

Unlike my redraft league advice above, I would rather overdraft youth in exchange for long term, high-end productivity.

NOTE: You may also very slight differences in where I rank rookies between my dynasty league rankings and rookie rankings. This is because I value players a bit differently based on whether it's year 1 of a dynasty league or your annual rookie-only draft. For the most part, the rankings will match.

Enjoy the rankings and enjoy dominating your league for the next decade!

Rookie Rankings

These rankings reflect my rookie strategy for rookie-only drafts. You may notice slight differences in where I rank rookies in this section compared to where I rank them in redraft leagues or even in my dynasty rankings (which are built for the first year of a dynasty league). This is because rookie-only drafts are more speculative in nature. You're not as concerned with building an overall roster as you are in cashing in on rookies that can boom for you a year or two down the line.

Sleepers

If you skipped ahead to the sleepers section, I strongly urge you to read the PAR section. My view on sleepers is at by the time of your draft, any “sleeper” is so overhyped that they are very likely overhyped by the time you select. My approach with PAR is based in scouting and player production. Most importantly, I cross analyze these projections with average draft position to outline true value. I use PAR to help identify players who are completely undervalued, and, in most cases, my “hibernator” players are getting so little publicity that you can likely draft them in the last round (yes, after your kicker and defense selections).

These picks are broken down into three categories:

1. Undervalued – based on average draft position, these players should be available between rounds 8 and 11. If you miss targets earlier in the draft, players in this category project to be season-long starters regardless of league format.
2. Deep Sleepers – based on average draft position, these players should be available between rounds 11 and 15 of your draft. Players in this category should produce at flex levels for most, if not all season.
3. Hibernators – based on average draft position, players in this category will likely be undrafted, but they should be rostered going into week 1 of the season.

Under-Valued:

- QB, Tom Brady: Yeah, he’s “old”, but he plays young and. If he can stay on the field, lock in 40 touchdowns for Brady again this year. His ADP ranks 97th, but his PAR score ranks 27th. If you miss on QBs earlier in the draft, Brady will be excellent consolation prize.
- QB, Aaron Rodgers: I wasn’t high on Rodgers coming into this offseason. After digging into his productivity when Devante Adams was off the field, I have no questions. The running backs will lead the way, but there will be plenty of touchdown passes to go around.
- RB, James Robinson: I don’t love running backs in the Doug Pederson scheme, but Robinson could have the most consistent role. Yes, Travis Etienne (and others) will take carries away, but Robinson is likely to get the bulk of red zone touches.
- RB, Rashaad Penny: Penny is a boom or bust pick for me this year because he has fierce competition with rookie Ken Walker III and a returning Chris Carson. That said, you can get Penny in the late rounds, and he is definitely worth the risk. Did you see the last few weeks of 2021? Imagine grabbing him in the 10th round, which you can do at the time of this writing. He could be a championship-maker at that value.
- WR, Rashod Bateman: Bateman can still be had in the 9th round, but I expect that to change as we advance through the offseason. Bateman will be the top WR on the Ravens and that should be good enough for 1,000 yards and 8-12 touchdowns. Not bad for the late rounds.
- WR, Treyton Burks: Burks looks like an A.J. Brown clone. He found the perfect spot in Tennessee. Not only is the offense built for a player of his talents, but Burks has very little competition (at least while Robert Woods rehabs his ACL tear from last year). Burks is currently an 8th round pick, but it wouldn’t surprise me at all if he outscores the more popular A.J. Brown in 2022.

- WR, Allen Robinson: His ADP ranks 102nd! Robinson put up big numbers with Blake Bortles and Mitch Trubisky throwing him passes. And the fantasy football consensus doesn't think he'll do better with Matt Stafford throwing him passes and Cooper Kupp drawing coverage away from him? Buy on Allen Robinson.
- WR, JuJu Smith-Schuster: Smith-Schuster hasn't done much for fantasy owners the last two years but hear me out. In 2019, he had Mason Rudolph and Duck Hodges throwing him passes. In 2020, Big Ben was back, and JuJu caught 97 balls and 9 touchdowns. In 2021, the offense shifted to a run-first mentality and Smith-Schuster only played in 5 games. I look at Smith-Schuster and see a 26-year-old. He's the top WR on an offense with Patrick Mahomes throwing passes. Will he reproduce Tyreek Hill's stats? No, but Smith-Schuster will produce stats.
- WRs, Courland Sutton: Jerry Jeudy's ADP is higher, but I like Sutton just as much. The addition of Russell Wilson to the Broncos will give both WRs a lift. Sutton is currently slotted as an 8th rounder. In this offense, he could be a top-20 WR in 2022.
- WR, Adam Thielen: I'm cheating here. As of the time of this writing, Thielen's ADP is hovering around 70, which makes him a 6th or 7th round pick. I wanted to call him out because his PAR score is 13th overall. He's a player I'd be happy to overdraft in the 5th round just to lock in the potential. Cousins throws to him just as much as he throws to Jefferson on the goal line.
- TE, Mike Gesicki: The new offensive system will suit Gesicki well. On the goal line, teams will be focusing on Hill and Waddle, which will leave the emerging TE in winnable matchups. He's my favorite sleeper tight end this year.

Deep Sleepers:

- QB, Jameis Winston: An injury cut short what was shaping up to be a career year for Jameis Winston. In limited action, he kept his turnovers under control. His receiving options include Michael Thomas, Jarvis Landry, Marquez Callaway, Chris Olave ... oh, and Alvin Kamara. I wouldn't want him to be my QB1, but he can start for you in a pinch.
- RB, Tyler Allgeier: Dynasty players are always looking for RBs with upside, but they are snoozing on Allgeier. The rookie could provide value as early as week 1. Allgeier's 40 time looks bad on paper, but he plays faster. Cordarrelle Patterson will lead the backfield thanks to his ability to play a hybrid RB-WR role, but Allgeier will compete with an underrated Damien Williams for the traditional RB responsibilities. He has a shot to win.
- RB, James Cook: Of all the rookie running backs, Cook has the easiest path to touches in 2022 and you can get him in the 10th or 11th round. I know Buffalo running backs haven't scored well, but Cook is the best they've had in years. Also, the offense is going to be tweaked in 2022 with a new play caller. Might we see more rushing attempts?
- RB, Ronald Jones: Jones and Clyde Edwards-Helaire are both dropping – perhaps because there could be a competition between these two in training camp. I lean the other way. I expect both running backs to score well. Jones is an upgrade. Hill is gone. Is it unreasonable to think Jones could match Darrel Williams' numbers last year (1,000 yards and 8 TDs)?
- RBs Chase Edmonds, Sony Michel and Raheem Mostert: With respect to Myles Gaskin, who I really enjoy watching, the Dolphins seem intent on giving other players touches. I was loving the value of an Edmonds/Mostert split backfield, but the late signing of Sony Michel muddied the waters. Mostert's speed-back role should be safe as long as he's healthy. The Edmonds/Michel battle will be one to watch, but the winner will also be undervalued on draft day.

- RB, Marlon Mack: Remember him? No? That's ok, I'll remind you. Mack was the best Colts running back for a few seasons. Jonathan Taylor came to town; Mack blew out his achilles and we haven't heard much from him in two seasons. At this point, Mack is the best back on Houston. Might he be out-competed by rookie Dameon Pierce? Maybe, but a lot of Pierce's college productivity came from beating defenders to the sideline. That won't happen in the NFL. I give the early advantage to Mack.
- RB, Jamaal Williams: I love D'Andre Swift, but the Lions are going to continue using Jamaal Williams. Last year, he received enough touches to warrant flexing a few times per season. He should be rostered in your league.
- WR, Michael Gallup: Fantasy players are overthinking this. Michael Gallup is now the #2 WR in an offense that produce 40 passing touchdowns last season. His ADP is 120! His PAR rank is 36th. There is not a better value player in this draft as far as I'm concerned. I'll be planning to take him two rounds prior to his ADP just to make sure I get him on my roster.
- WR, Russell Gage: Gage is the 3rd receiving option in Tampa Bay and that's ok with me. Antonio Brown played this role last season and very quietly produced at top-10 levels. Thanks to Brown's injuries and the polarizing bare-chested walk-off in New York, it's easy to forget how well the WR3 scores in this offense. Gage should be in line for several easy touchdown grabs this year. I like him as a flex option all season.
- WR, Kenny Golladay: We are only two seasons removed from an 1,190-yard, 11 TD season. In 2020, Golladay was injured early and played in only 5 games. In 2021, he took the big money with the Giants, but caught 0 TDs on what was an awful team. The change in coaching staff will turn things around. Golladay will have to hold off Toney and Slayton, but I think he can do it. He's worth a late round flyer.
- WR, Allen Lazard: I think Lazard will benefit most among receivers with Davante Adams leaving town. I don't know that he can consistently beat double teams, but Aaron Rodgers is excellent at throwing players open. Lazard is my bet to score the most fantasy points among Packers WRs.
- WR, Rondale Moore: The 6-game suspension of DeAndre Hopkins will help Moore progress in this offense. Marquise Brown and A.J. Green are likely to play on the outside. I expect Moore to see increased carries and targets this year. Best case scenario, he turns into one of the league's more exciting flex players. Worst case scenario, he'll be a flex option in PPR formats.
- WR, Marquez Valdes-Scantling: I think either Mecole Hardman or Marquez Valdes-Scantling will take a step forward this fantasy season. We'll know more in training camp, but my bet is on MVS. He was brought in to run deep routes and stretch the field, so the likes of Kelce, Hardman, Moore and Smith-Schuster have more space to work with. Running deep routes in this offense bodes well for fantasy players.

Hibernators:

- QB, Daniel Jones: I'm not going to lie – I don't have a great projection on Daniel Jones. Nor am I hearing (or seeing) encouraging signs at this point in the offseason. However, he's in a great system and is surrounded by a lot of talent. If you're in a deep league or in a 2-QB format, he could be ok.
- QB, Marcus Mariota: Everyone likes a mobile QB. I'm not going to say that Mariota has the athleticism of Lamar Jackson, but he is a QB that will get rushing TDs and has a few solid options to throw to (Kyle Pitts, Drake London and Cordarrelle Patterson). He could be on the stronger side of "average" this season.
- RB, Tyrion Davis-Price: OK, I get it – Eli Mitchell looked great last year. Do me a favor and keep these three things in mind: First, San Francisco has generally used two running backs during Shanahan's tenure. Second, Davis-Price is an upgrade over Sermon and Jeff Wilson Jr. Third, in this same space last year, I suggested keeping an eye on a neglected SF rookie RB who could win the job outright (Mitchell). Davis-Price could find himself in a 50-50 split with Mitchell, or better. Davis-Price should have real value in 2022 whether he is the primary ball handler or not. I personally will plan to use my last roster spot on either Herbert or Davis-Price.

- RB, Khalil Herbert: To my knowledge, I'm the only one campaigning for Khalil Herbert in the fantasy football community. At worst, Chicago is a two-back backfield and Herbert contributes. Best case scenario? Herbert wins the job in camp and he's a season-long RB2. Roster him ahead of week 1 just in case.
- RB, James White: I was expecting the Patriots to cut ties with White, whose league age is on the wrong side of 30. I then expected White to follow McDaniels to Las Vegas ... but that didn't happen. The Patriots held onto the veteran back, which leads me to believe he'll slide right back into his pass-catching role. If you're in a PPR league and you need depth at RB, use your last pick on White.
- WR, Marvin Jones: For the first time in years, Jones will NOT be playing in a Darrell Bevell offensive system. Still, the Jaguars passing game will improve with the new coaching and I suspect Jones will out-target Christian Kirk. Kirk should get more yards and touchdowns, but Jones will be serviceable thanks to his receptions.
- TE, Evan Engram: Another Jaguar! Engram spent a few tough years with the Giants, but he has shown he can produce when his quarterback can get him the ball. The Jaguars will utilize the tight end position and Engram has a good chance to resurrect his career.
- TE, David Njoku: I saw the news of Njoku's contract and thought to myself "oh yeah... Njoku." I think the rest of the fantasy football community might be thinking the same thing. Austin Hooper is gone and Njoku should be able to out compete Harrison Bryant this season. He'll have Deshaun Watson throwing him passes (assuming a suspension DOESN'T come this year). I think we'll see his ADP climb as the offseason moves on, but for now, you should be able to grab him with your last draft pick.

Risk Players

The players below are being drafted much higher than my statistical models suggest they should be. This isn't necessarily a criticism of the player, but a combination of factors including complimentary players and offensive scheme. I'm not suggesting that you avoid these players entirely, but don't overdraft them.

- Josh Jacobs, RB: I don't mind Jacobs, but his average draft position is far too high. Remember that Jacobs' productivity came mostly with volume and red zone touches. Both of these will be decreasing in the new offensive scheme. Jacobs will likely continue his first and second down duties, but there will be other backs worked into this rotation. I like Jacobs, but not as a top-60 player.
- David Montgomery, RB: This is a tough one. I like the scheme for Montgomery, but the new coaching staff could very easily give more touches to Khalil Herbert. I think we're going to see this Chicago backfield feature both running backs, so Montgomery's volume will be decreasing.
- Devin Singletary, RB: I've long been a Devin Singletary apologist, but it ends in 2022. I think James Cook will win the starting RB job in training camp. Singletary is likely to take a step back this season.
- Ken Walker III, RB: The winner of the Seahawks running back battle in training camp will be a strong starter all season. I'm concerned about the other running backs. The combination of Chris Carson (if he can return from injury) and Rashaad Penny will offer Walker formidable competition. For those of you who are dismissing Carson/Penny in 2022 based on Walker's draft position, remember that Penny is a former first round pick and has taken several years to emerge. I don't think Walker will dominate reps this year and because of that, his average draft position is too high for me in one-year formats.

- Rachaad White, RB: Similar to Trey Sermon last year, I'm concerned about Rachaad White's speed. While his 40 time is sub-4.5, he looks slower to me on tape. Not only that, but he has Leonard Fournette and Gio Bernard ahead of him on the depth chart. For White to have fantasy impact in 2022, he'll need two players to be injured. I consider him a prospect in dynasty leagues only.
- Davante Adams, WR: I enjoy watching Aaron Rodgers play quarterback, so I've watched A LOT of Packers games over the years. As impressive as Adams is, it's fair to say Aaron Rodgers gave him quite a boost with those constant back shoulder audibles. I know Adams played with Derek Carr in college, but I just don't think it's likely the Adams/Carr connection will be as strong. Adams should take a slight step back this year, but his average draft position is still a bit too high for me. At the top of the draft, I'd rather draft players that I'm 100% confident in.
- Chris Olave, WR: I liked Olave before Jarvis Landry signed in New Orleans. I think he will top out as WR4 for the Saints this season, so I'm staying away in one-year league formats.
- Travis Kelce, TE: Yeah, I'll say it! Kelce concerns me this year. It's not that I think he's worth drafting in the early rounds, the departure of Tyreek Hill will allow defenses to focus more attention on Kelce weekly. The matchups will be tougher AND Kelce's league age is 32 this season. Adding to that, the tight end position in fantasy isn't as top-heavy as it has been in recent seasons. There are other TEs that will provide strong value, so you don't need to emphasize Kelce in the top two rounds. If he drops to you in the third (and I doubt he will), I'd be fine taking him.
